Overview

How do you draft-proof a sunroom?

Here's how it works. 1. Fill gaps 2. Window film 3. Thermal window coverings 4. Use rugs 5. Draft-proof the ceiling Does a sunroom need ventilation?

Draft-proofing sunrooms should be top of your to-do list before cold weather hits if you want to be able to continue to enjoy this space just as much through the winter as you did during the summer.

Does window film keep a sunroom warm?

Although often thought of as a method of preventing overheating in a sunroom, certain types of window film can actually help when it comes to keeping them warmer – and when you consider the cost of a sunroom, it makes sense to ensure you can use it as much as possible.

How do I insulate my sunroom windows?

If you are looking for a quick, easy and affordable way to insulate your sunroom windows, then this shrinkable window film is perfect. The sheets are made to fit standard-size windows and all that is required is a hairdryer to shrink the film to fit.

How do you ventilate a sunroom?

There are several ways to ventilate a sunroom. In some cases you can tie the sunroom into your HVAC system. However, if this is not an option, you can purchase a portable air conditioner. This Portable Air Conditioner with Dehumidifier from Amazon balances humidity and helps introduce fresh air. You could also consider adding a vent fan.
